

Negotiations continue on lagoon site

The deal for land for the new lagoon appears to be on the home stretch.

The Humphrey City Council met March 17 at executive session to discuss the purchase agreement.

When the council re-convened, Mayor Alan Eschweiler announced that he and Vice-Chairman Lester Weidner would meet with the landowner to go over the final details of the contract.

The property is located by Dick and June Zach's house, 1 mile south and a 1/2 mile west of the existing lagoon.

This site was one of the 20 original sites identified by the council as possible locations.

These sites were visited in March, but after a public hearing there was some discussion over those sites, so the council looked elsewhere, including along another road at the Zach property, which was among the 20 original properties.

The council and Zach are in the process of negotiating the purchase of about 24 acres.

The Zachs will manage a pond at no charge and be able to sell water to other land they own in that area — along with the discounted price of the land.

In another agenda item, the council agreed to have Scott Brown look into the cost of repairing or replacing the swimming pool.

He will bring an estimate to the April meeting.

Brown said the crack in the pool has to be repaired each year, and it is time to look at a permanent answer.

He will contact Backback Aquatics Inc., of Platteville, Wis., about the pool.

The original pool opened in 1972, and in 1981 the current pool opened after voters approved a $40,000 bond issue.

In other agenda items, the council

• Approved the request by Humphrey

Fire Chief Jim Hohenberg to hold a memorial service, June 14. The service on the northeast side of Main Street closed for the service.

Police Chief Tom McElroy, Platte County Sheriff's Deputies, security

• Hired Missouri Beach manager for the Humphrey Center.

• Hired summer help at Platine pool manager, summer pool manager.

• See L

Death Race fun Creston's Chris Smith enjoys putting himself to the test

Chris Smith is in a death race — and he can't wait to get started.

The 22-year-old Creston resident is preparing to take part in the 2014 Spartan Death race in Pittsfield, N.Y.

Smith will be one of 300 racers per in the endurance race Part 2.

"This is my first year in the Death Race, but not my first endurance race."

"I do a lot of the Spartan races, and it's put on by the same group," he said. "I've been training hard since last 2012." He has traveled to races in Illinois, Colorado, Illinois, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Texas, Kansas and most recently was in Minnesota.

Smith calls the endurance races exciting.

"I thought it would be, and I think it was and it's addictive," he said.

Chris Smith is ready for his Death Race. The 22-year-old Creston man is preparing for the 2014 Spartan Death race in Pittsfield, Vt. Part of his training included pushing 1000-lb trees.

"I know the challenges and putting yourself in front of your car and finding that breaking point."

Smithson's passion is Triathlons. Smithson is involved in triathlons, just like his dad, Alvin's Cancer 2000, and his mother, who travel for the races and vacations all over the world.

The races are always a family affair.

He said the most difficult part of the race is climbing, walking, running, carrying heavy objects, jumping, climbing, pulling back arms, climbing trees and jumping over logs.

"There's a lot of different things," he said. "It's not just who's the fastest, who's the strongest, who's the best, who's the most fit, who's the most athletic."

The Death race, which starts April 26, will be Smith's first.

The theme of the 2014 Death Race is "The Opposites" and according to a press release, "with 30 percent of last year's participants were still standing after the event ended after nearly 70 hours."

Last place in the race, Smith will receive a prize for 10 more than a dozen boxes weighing more than 30 pounds.

The course is 40 miles long, and what makes it even more challenging is that racers have to decide what to expect next because the course map and list of challenges are kept secret.

"All I know is I'm going to get a great big smile, because I don't want anything to go wrong, but I don't care, and I'm going out and just doing what they tell me," he said.

He hasn't pack for the marathon.

Smith's motto around the track reads,

"never measure twice in the back of Adore, due to lots and pounds around."

"We'll also eat fast and burn off all around Creston, Columbus and Northfield as part of the training."

Smith said he became a member of a group called the Black Sheep Spartan, that trains in those races.

The group includes people for a mix from around the country in various ages and states from Columbus and Northfield.

Smith said they support each other and make sure they all stand up for each other," he said.

"We don't leave anyone behind, I don't care where they finish, we're there for each other," he said.

For more information on the Death Race visit www.PitRace.com.

Cornlea businesses show they have lot to offer

Cornhusker Power's Community Builders visits 3 businesses

There's a new Cornhusker Power team member.

Due to what former Cornhusker Power's Community Builders program had to offer.

The program is sponsored by Cornhusker Power, Prime, DFCI, Lincoln Public Power, and Central Community Colleges.

Representatives from each utility, including Michael

McKee, Cornhusker Power's

Community Relations Manager

and Vicki Schaefer, Cornhusker Power's

Community Relations Manager.

They're new to Cornhusker Power.

The day concluded with a tour of Back of the Barn and their facilities, Public Works, Environmental Health Services, and the department's "Public Works Communication Initiatives," which is working to improve their communication.

The tour took place on Tuesday, March 18, 2014, and Cornhusker Power's Community Builders, represented by Vicki Schaefer and Vicki McKee.

Back of the Barn, located at 1000 1/2th Street, is the county's solid waste facility.

"It's a great facility," Schaefer said.

"It's a great place to work," McKee said.

"It's a great place to work," Schaefer said.

"It's a great place to work," McKee said.

"It's a great place to work," Schaefer said.

Businesses in the community need to be involved in the community, McKee said. "Businesses, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.

"Businesses are vital to the community, and business, non-profits, faith groups, towns, city departments and the community to help the community," she said.